

THE LEICHT ARCHITECTURAL KITCHEN

With the 2022 collection, LEICHT is documenting its expertise in high-grade interior design far beyond the confines of the kitchen. The manufacturer from Waldstetten, Germany, offers an impressive variety of options for planning and designing the entire living space – thus positioning itself as a future-oriented player at a time when the kitchen and cross-room living are increasingly being thought of as an entity. LEICHT's architectural kitchens can be found in modern, timeless buildings. Here, the company takes all aesthetic desires and individual needs into consideration and offers maximum design freedom in the cross-room planning scenario – from the open-plan kitchen area and living space to bathroom solutions and contemporary dressing rooms. With the new collection, LEICHT is making a powerful statement about its exemplary design of all kinds of forms of living in 2022 and beyond. The company possesses the necessary know-how for this as well as the appropriate product portfolio of high-quality materials, sensitively coordinated colours and innovative techniques. Furthermore, the new collection focuses, on the one hand, on its innovative new M8 interior frame, a filigree, subtly concealed product, and, on the other, the continuation of the successful real wood surface programme BOSSA. Overall, the collection combines precise workmanship, elegant as well as graphically clear design and a high level of functionality, while offering that certain special something in the living space.

M8 interior frame – visible purism meets concealed functionality

With this year's launch of the pullout system M8, LEICHT is presenting a new, innovative, technical product which, with its clear, reduced design, continues the elegant signature of the kitchen manufacturer and complements the existing design lines PRIMO, CONTINO and EVO. M8 is a carbon grey subframe made of powder-coated steel with a wall thickness of eight millimetres. It differs from conventional frames in that the guiding rail is not located on the side of the drawer, but has been positioned underneath its base. Despite its filigree nature, the solidly welded frame is able to keep the technology of the pullout system completely hidden and guarantee reliable stability as well as maximum convenience during use. With this new product, LEICHT is reinterpreting an effective basic of interior design and is launching an elegant as well as clearly graphic product on the market which can be used in a variety of ways in kitchens, living rooms and bathrooms and which makes a decisive difference thanks to its attention to detail. Because for LEICHT, luxury is not a question of the obvious – subtle functions and design decisions as exemplified by the purist M8 pullout system contribute to the overall kitchen experience. The company is thus following the spirit of the times in terms of designing furniture down to its very core – with minimalist lines and using high-quality materials.

BOSSA – the successful real wood surface programme for elegant cosiness

In its 2021 collection, LEICHT entered completely new territory and laid the foundation for a new type of room concept and furnishing aesthetic in the high-end kitchen segment with the BOSSA programme. Their courage was rewarded: since its market launch, BOSSA has proven to be extremely successful and style-defining for diverse planning in the cross-kitchen living area. The characteristic design element is the vertically lined surface structure of the real wood fronts, which makes a powerful statement. Protruding, linear ridges, 7.5 millimetres wide with a gap of 5 millimetres between each ridge, give BOSSA a delicate, extremely vital, three-dimensional look. The overall grid of the ridges of 12.5 millimetres corresponds exactly to the vertical joint pattern of LEICHT – a graphic effect the new pullout system M8 also uses for orientation. The result is a stringent, visual fusion of kitchen, wall and unit fronts to create a furnishing soloist. BOSSA comes in two veneers: the version in light oak has a Scandinavian look characterised by tranquillity, while the version in dark walnut is sublime and elegantly reminiscent of Italian 'grandezza'. BOSSA is architectural, modern, bold – and will retain these characteristics in the living space of the future, too.

LEICHT is compelling with cross-room planning diversity in modern interior design

The interior frame M8 and the real wood surface programme BOSSA combine to create a holistic concept with which individual solutions can be realised throughout the entire living space. Whether in the cooking, dining or living area, the dressing room, bathroom, entrée or hallway: with the two main components of the 2022 collection, both surfaces and furniture can be designed in a uniform material and colour scheme, thus uniting them in a coherent overall architectural structure. On the outside, BOSSA defines the look and gives the interior a warm, homely atmosphere. Inside, the filigree yet robust frame maintains the high-quality, minimalist overall appearance when drawers are opened. Together they make a statement for a timeless look – with a puristically luxurious elegance right down to the very last detail.
